

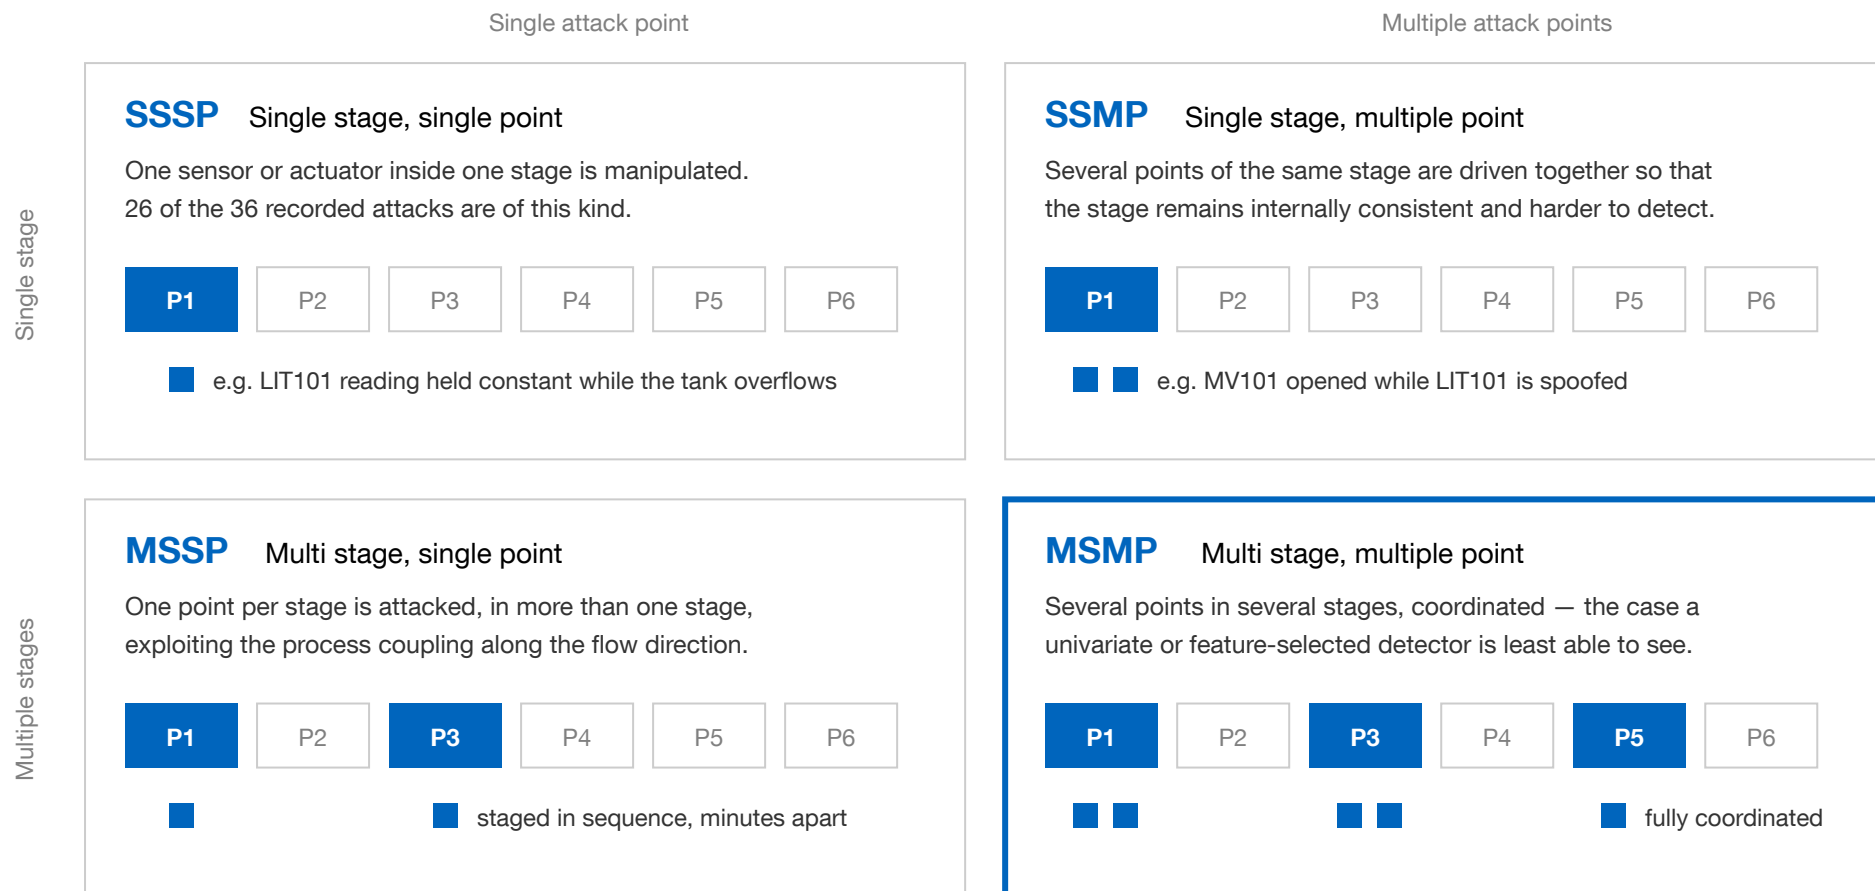

Figure 2.10: The four attack classes of the SWaT attack model, arranged by the number of stages and the number of attack points involved. Blue cells mark attacked stages, blue squares individual attack points. Difficulty increases towards the lower right: a coordinated multi-stage, multi-point attack keeps every individual signal within its plausible range and can only be recognised from the joint behaviour of the 51 variables, which is the argument for a multivariate detector.